Corporal Molson Wounded.

Corporal Merrit Molson of "C" company, 369th infantry, was wounded in action, according to official notice received by his mother, who lives at 49 North Swan street, Albany. A recent letter to his mother describing the day when he was wounded follows:

"The Huns tried to get me but they didn't succeed. However, they gave me a couple of marks and I will always remember them.

"I had only one regret when they carried me in out of the field and that was I was sorry I couldn't get more of them than I did. The wounds I received are very slight. One is a scalp wound and the other is in my right shoulder.

"I am now at Base hospital 2 in Paris. I used to think that to go out on a raiding or patroling party was quite risky and daring but it is like eating pie alongside of going over in an attack because the enemy are ready and looking for you. From the time we left the last line of the German trenches on the third morning of the drive, we had nothing but open fields in our sector for over a mile and a half. It seemed to me to be a death trap. The Germans were sending over as many shells as our artillery and their machine guns were very busy. But with all of that we drove them back three miles that day."
